Context variables

Besides fields from $issue object you can also refer several other variables from $context. They are convenience variables and are available in every notification by default

This table shows what you can get from $context

Variable	Meaning	Example
$context.today	Current day - evaluated when template is executed	2016-10-15
$context.yesterday	Yesterday - evaluated when template is executed	2016-10-14
$context.sevendaysago	7 days ago - evaluated when template is executed	2016-10-07
$context.timezone	Timezone as defined in your JIRA instance	UTC
$context.onehourago	beginning of previous hour in format yyyy-MM-dd'T'HH:mm:ss.SSSZ	2016-10-15T22:17:31.661+0200
$context.last_run	Date when the scheduled messaging was last run. Applicable to digested notifications only	2016-10-07 08:01
$context.currentUsername	Username of user retrieved when template is being evaluated
$context.currentUserId	Atlassian ID of the current user
$context.currentUserDisplayName	User full name - retrieved when template is evaluated	John Doe
$context.currentUserEmail	User's email address - retrieved when template is evaluated	jdoe@mycompany.com
$context.destination	Destination of message. Email, slack channel or HipChat room	#general
$context.baseurl	Base URL of JIRA installation. Useful for rendering links to issues	https://jiraserver.mycompany.com:2990/jira
$context.currentRecipientUser	An object that contains the following properties: displayName, emailAddress, accountId. Can be used to customise outgoing email message to contain details about user who is receiving the notification	Hello $context.currentRecipientUser.displayName